Disclosure

Please note, this is a special issue of the International Journal of Nuclear Security. The issue may not meet the traditional content perceptions of a standard academic journal. However, all submissions went through the same review, revision, and publication process as all other IJNS publications and thus shall be represented as valuable to our research and community.

Statement on Inclusivity

This special issue aims to celebrate the contributions of women to nuclear security. In this issue, the term “women” is used to refer broadly to all self-identified women and non-binary people. This special issue highlights their contributions through invited features on women leaders and mentors, in addition to featuring the scholarly work of women authors or primarily women teams of authors. The open call for submissions to this special issue was open to all aspects of nuclear security within the scope of IJNS.
